

Aprons

A collection of aprons does not appeal to the eye, like other collections on shelves. So when I counted my over 40 aprons, I chose to display them on a clothes line and ladders so that the various fashions, styles and fabric traditions would make a colorful appearance. Inspired by my memories of mother, grandmother and great grandmother in aprons as they created 'home', I took a trip back and found that aprons reflect the history of cotton fabric and creative reuse so much alive across our country. The best is the stories visitors tell as they view an apron, simple but with deep memory.

Kathryn McCormick